Google expands the Local Services Ads Lead Generation program for Attorneys, Real Estate Agents, & Financial Planners

Google has recently announced plans to expand the Local Services Ads program to professional services nationwide. Participating companies that meet Google’s qualification criteria are given the opportunity to be listed at the top of the results page when a user is searching for a specific service.

How does Google’s Local Services Ads for Attorneys, Real Estate Agents & Financial Planners work?

To participate in the program, advertisers must pass Google’s screening and qualification process in order to earn their GOOGLE SCREENED badge.

Customers who search for legal services, realtors or financial planners are shown three (two on mobile) verified listings of qualified providers at the top of their search results page.

To contact the provider, the user calls the presented phone number which connects the customer to the attorney’s, realtors, or financial planner’s office.

How much does a lead/opportunity cost?

Google’s Local Services Ads is a pay per call program where you are only charged for calls over 30 seconds. This is to ensure you are only charged for legitimate leads. Clients can also receive message leads.

How does Google rank service providers?

This verified directory rewards providers based on their quality of service and reliability.

Service providers that demonstrate high responsiveness and receive a large number of positive customer Google reviews are ranked higher and show up at the top of the search engine results page more frequently.

Where is the program available?

The program was piloted earlier this year in four US cities: Atlanta, Houston, Austin, and San Diego for attorneys, real estate agents, and financial planners. The program is now available nationwide across the US.
